Foreword

Emanuel Macedo de Medeiros
Co-Founder & Global CEO

It is with obvious pride and natural excitement that I introduce the SIGAWomen Council and the exceptional women that, with us, will be shaping the future of global Sport. The SIGAWomen Council is a distinguished group of elite female leaders, each bringing a wealth of experience and seniority from every corner of the global sports industry. From women leagues' executives, women club owners and entrepreneurs to athletes, advocates and administrators, the collective leadership of these women is setting a powerful example of what is possible when gender equity and female leadership take center stage in Sport.

The wisdom, vision, and foresight of the SIGAWomen Council are invaluable assets to SIGA's vision, mission and governance reform agenda. Their leadership will accelerate our efforts to pave the way for greater inclusion, representation, and equity in Sport, ensuring that women's voices and contributions are heard and properly taken into account across all levels of the industry – starting by the highest executive organs of national and international sports federations, where female representation is still confined to mere 28%. Through their unwavering commitment, they will help us to shape the future, where female leadership in Sport is no longer a rare exception but the expected standard.

Times are changing. It is truly remarkable to reflect on how an idea, born during a flight between Lisbon and Geneva, has grown into a global movement that is now recognized and acclaimed across the world. It fills me with immense pride to contemplate how the spark of that idea has turned into an unstoppable force for change, and to see SIGAWomen reaching its maturity.

The impact of this initiative is undeniable, as countless women and girls who have been empowered and inspired by the work we do can confirm. A key driving force behind this success has been the SIGAWomen Global Mentorship Programme for Aspiring Female Leaders in Sport. This programme, supported by an incredible network of female leaders who volunteer their time and expertise – and to whom I'm thankful – has transformed the lives of so many women and girls striving to make their mark in Sport. And they will continue to do so, in larger numbers every year, as this mentorship initiative is about to open its doors to the "Class of 2025" and create pathways for the next generation of women in leadership roles.

On a personal note, I can't really describe how I feel seeing how a vision, that began as a simple idea, has become such a force for good in the lives of so many. Watching SIGAWomen flourish into the influential and respected movement it is today has been nothing short of inspiring, and I am beyond grateful for the incredible women who have, along these years, dedicated their time, energy, and passion to bring this vision to life.

To conclude, a special word of thanks must go to Katie Simmonds, who graciously (and courageously) accepted my invitation to lead this "brilliant idea" back in 2018. Her leadership and unwavering dedication have been pivotal to the success we see today, and I am fortunate to have had her by my side on this journey.

Together, the women and men of SIGA are making history, and the best is yet to come. The future of Women in Sport is brighter than ever. Not just on the tracks, the pitches and grounds where Sport is played. Not just on committees, task forces and other talking shops. But in the corridors and boardrooms where decisions are made. Of that I have absolutely no doubt.

Post Scriptum: I would be remiss if I did not take a moment to express my deepest gratitude to the women who have inspired me throughout my life: my wife, my mother, my grandmothers, my daughter... Without them, I would not be the person I am, accomplished as much as I did and be so deeply committed to ensuring that every person, including women and girls, has the opportunity to thrive, even in a sector as conservative and male dominated as sport.

Why do we need to Kick Start Change?

Since 2019, SIGA has conducted an independent research into the percentage of women's representation at the highest executive organs of the 32 international federations recognised by the International Olympic Committee.

Executive Summary

Katie Simmonds

Global Chief Commercial Officer
Chair, SIGAWomen

It has been a privilege to lead SIGAWomen since 2018 when SIGA's Global CEO, Emanuel Macedo de Medeiros, set me the challenge of creating a global mentorship programme to narrow the gender gap in terms of female representation on the board of sports organisations globally.

Initially, I must admit, I wasn't enamoured with the idea of being a poster girl for gender equity in sport as I had experienced firsthand how tough it is to be accepted for your credentials as a female sports lawyer and was used to being the only woman in the room. Why did I want to highlight my gender when this has been a barrier? However, once I discovered how taking one aspect of SIGA's Universal Standards on Good Governance in Sport – Gender Equity as the Gold Standard – and creating a programme that was accessible for women – could be so impactful – I was sold! Today SIGAWomen has become not just part of my portfolio of responsibilities, but a passion that has driven me to take it to new heights.

I am proud that over the past 5 years we have delivered mentorship to +300 women worldwide, creating a safe place to address topics that are tough to raise internally and arming mentees with all the smart answers, we wish we would have said, but often couldn't find our voice. At our fourth SIGAWomen Summit on Female Leadership held last year in New York, I set ourselves the challenge of doubling the impact of the 2024 Programme – moving from connecting 150 women annually represented from 32 countries to 300 women. Why? – because I believe that every female leader knows at least one other great woman to join – and I believe in the power of each of the global mentor's career stories as a dynamo for change.

If we want gender equity in sport, yes – we need male champions. We also need an army of female leaders that support aspiring women and equip them with the confidence and expertise to know their value and embark on a leadership journey. What we don't want is competitive women, holding onto the fact that they are the only woman, which sadly I have experienced all too often, and which, regrettably, I am not alone.

That is why I am thrilled that the members of the newly formed SIGAWomen Council, consisting of female leaders from all sides of the sports industry, with representation from each continent, have said yes! They play a key role to the global expansion of our mission and on behalf of SIGA, I thank them for accepting our invitation and being agents of change. SIGAWomen's mission is unstoppable, and I invite you to join us as we make 2025 our biggest and best mentorship programme to date!

Amanda Vandervort

Amanda Vandervort is the president of the USL Super League, a U.S. Soccer sanctioned division 1 professional women's soccer league. She is building a long-term sustainable business for the future of women's soccer in the United States, including a player development pathway from youth to pro, increased accessibility to the women's game among communities and across media platforms, and competition alignment with the global game. Vandervort is also a member of the U.S. Soccer Board of Directors and a SIGA Mentor.

Vandervort joined the USL after serving as chief women's football officer of FIFPRO, the global player's association based in Amsterdam, where she directed strategy, policy, and stakeholder relations. She published Raising Our Game, a women's football report detailing global soccer industry standards and a player-centric approach to improving the game. Prior, she spent nearly a decade at Major League Soccer as vice president of social media and CRM, then as vice president of fan engagement. She was recognized as a Sports Business Journal Game Changer in 2016 and Tampa Bay Business Journal Businesswoman of the Year in 2023.

"I am honored to be part of the SIGAWomen Council and contribute to its mission of fostering female empowerment and leadership in sports. Ensuring that women have equal opportunities to lead, influence, and shape the future of the sports industry is essential for its integrity and growth. A key aspect of this empowerment is financial literacy, equipping women with the knowledge and skills to make informed financial decisions throughout their careers and beyond. By championing education, mentorship, and good governance, I look forward to helping create a more inclusive and financially empowered future for women in sports."

"We must continue to work actively to remove all the obstacles that women face in sport, mainly in those where women have only recently entered the sport, as well as other difficulties that women face in other areas of life, and which are replicated in sport. To do this, it is not necessary to have been an athlete - which is not my case - but to have the will and to put all the knowledge acquired in all possible areas at the service of our fellow women, working equally with men, because this is an issue that concerns everyone. For this, you can count on me."
